RING AROUND A ROSE

"Mamacita! Papacito! I have exciting news to tell you," Little Pancho called to his parents. "We are invited to a wedding."

"Who is getting married?" asked Mamacita.

"Manuel and Rosita," Little Pancho replied. Then thrusting out his chest proudly he said, "I am to be the ring bearer. I will wear a fine new suit and carry the ring on a fancy pillow. I can hardly wait."

Little Pancho had to wait, however, because time moves only so fast and no faster. He passed the days by riding his burro and practicing how to march down the aisle in perfect step and walking very straight. When the big day finally arrived, Little Pancho was ready 'way ahead of time.

"I weel go now and meet Manuel," Little Pancho told his parents, as he jumped onto the back of his pet burro, Burrito.

"You should not ride that leetle donkey in your fine new suit," moaned Mamacita.

"You go faster on your two feet than that burro does on four," offered Papacito.

When Little Pancho arrived at Manuel's house, the bridegroom was waiting for him. All around were huge stacks of gay flowers fresh from his garden.

"These are for decorating the church," Manuel explained.

Together, they carefully piled the flowers on Burrito's back . . . all but two big red roses.

"And these are for decorating Burrito," laughed Manuel, as he put a rose behind each of the burro's ears. "Now, let us go."

With Burrito between them, Manuel and Little Pancho walked to the church. When they arrived, Little Pancho shook his finger at his pet and ordered sternly, "You stay right there till I come back for you."

Burrito wagged his ears, almost shaking off the roses stuck behind them.

Hurriedly, Little Pancho and Manuel set about decorating the church. When they finished, it looked gay and festive enough for a wedding, which was as it should be.

"Now I weel give you the wedding ring," Manuel told Little Pancho. "Be sure you do not lose eet."

"I weel not lose eet . . . once you find eet," Little Pancho laughed, when he noticed Manuel frantically searching in one pocket after the other . . . for the ring.

"I know I put eet somewhere," he groaned, adding sheepishly, "heh, heh, but where?"

After turning all his pockets inside out, he wailed, "Caramba, eet is lost."

Manuel's last words were lost on Little Pancho, who was halfway up the aisle, running toward another trouble. For there was Burrito, eating the flowers by the doorway. Little Pancho felt very sad because Burrito was making trouble.

When Manuel saw Burrito, he called, "If that burro eats my flowers, maybe he ate my ring, too."

"Burrito is not a billy goat. He does not eat rings, but he loves to eat flowers."

That was true, and Burrito went right on nibbling the flowers during the argument.

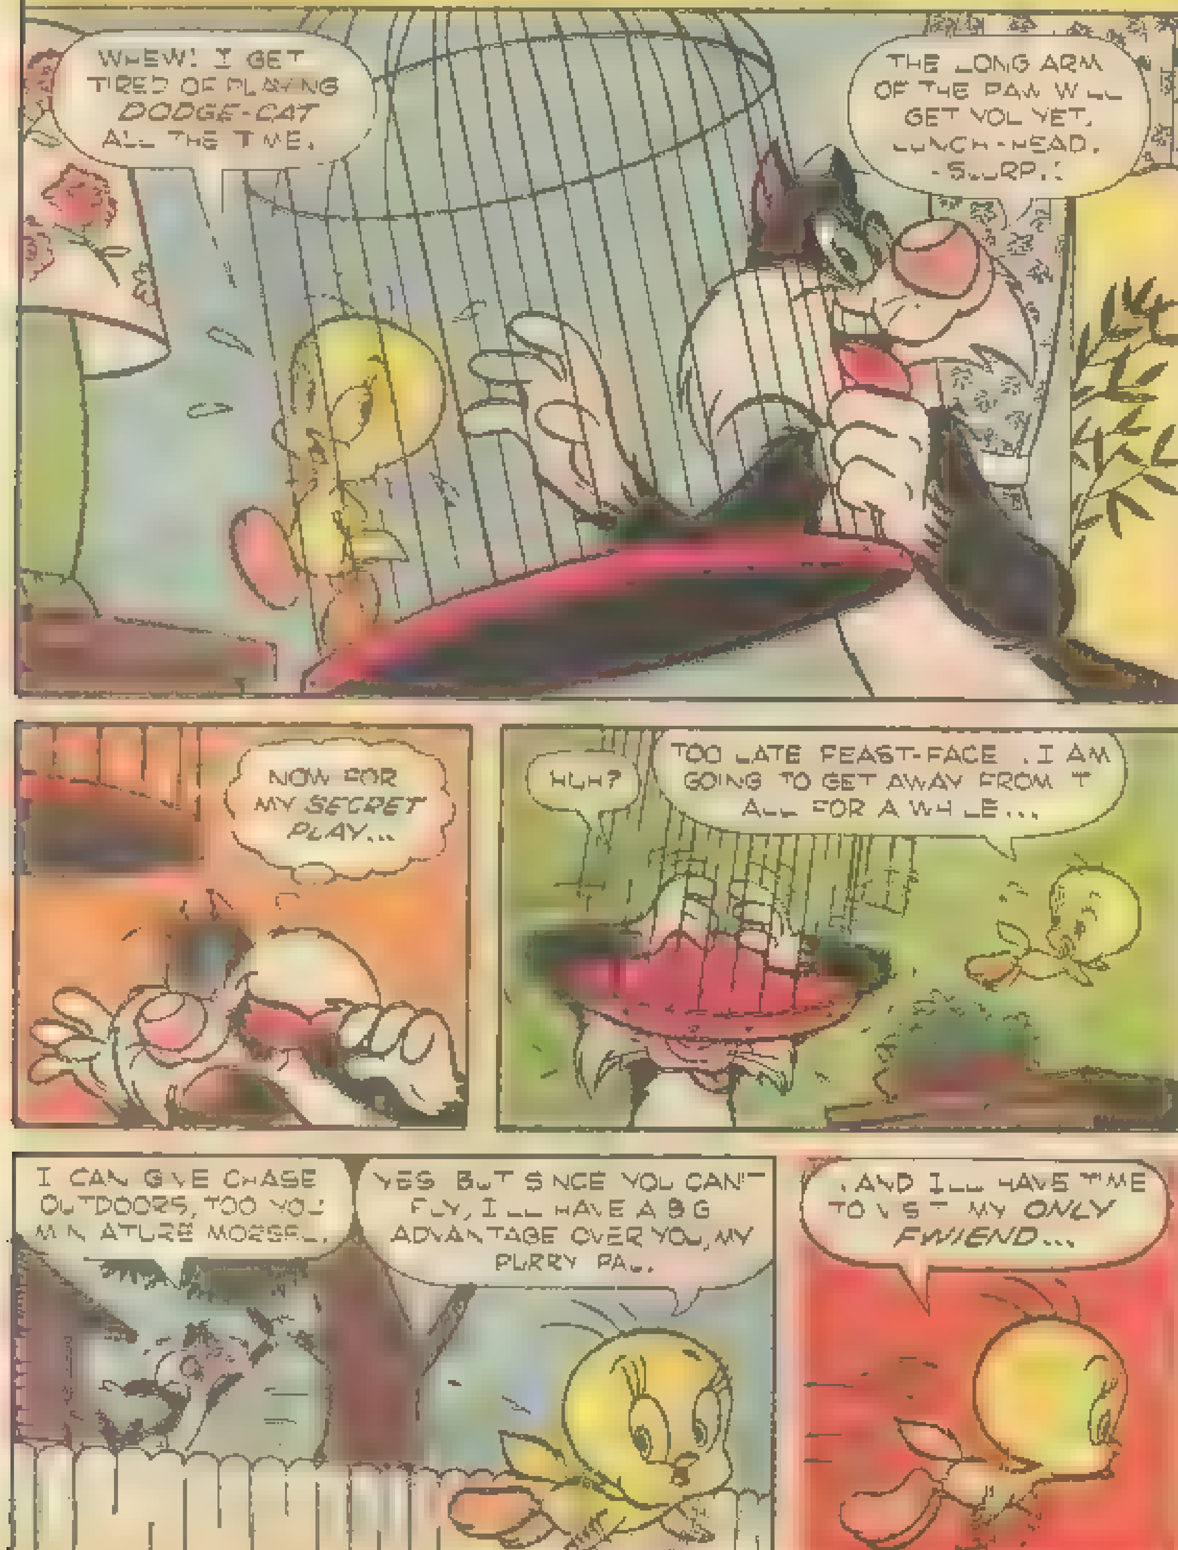

"Well, get him out of here so we can look for my ring. I cannot get married without a wedding ring, and now eet is lost," Manuel sighed sadly.

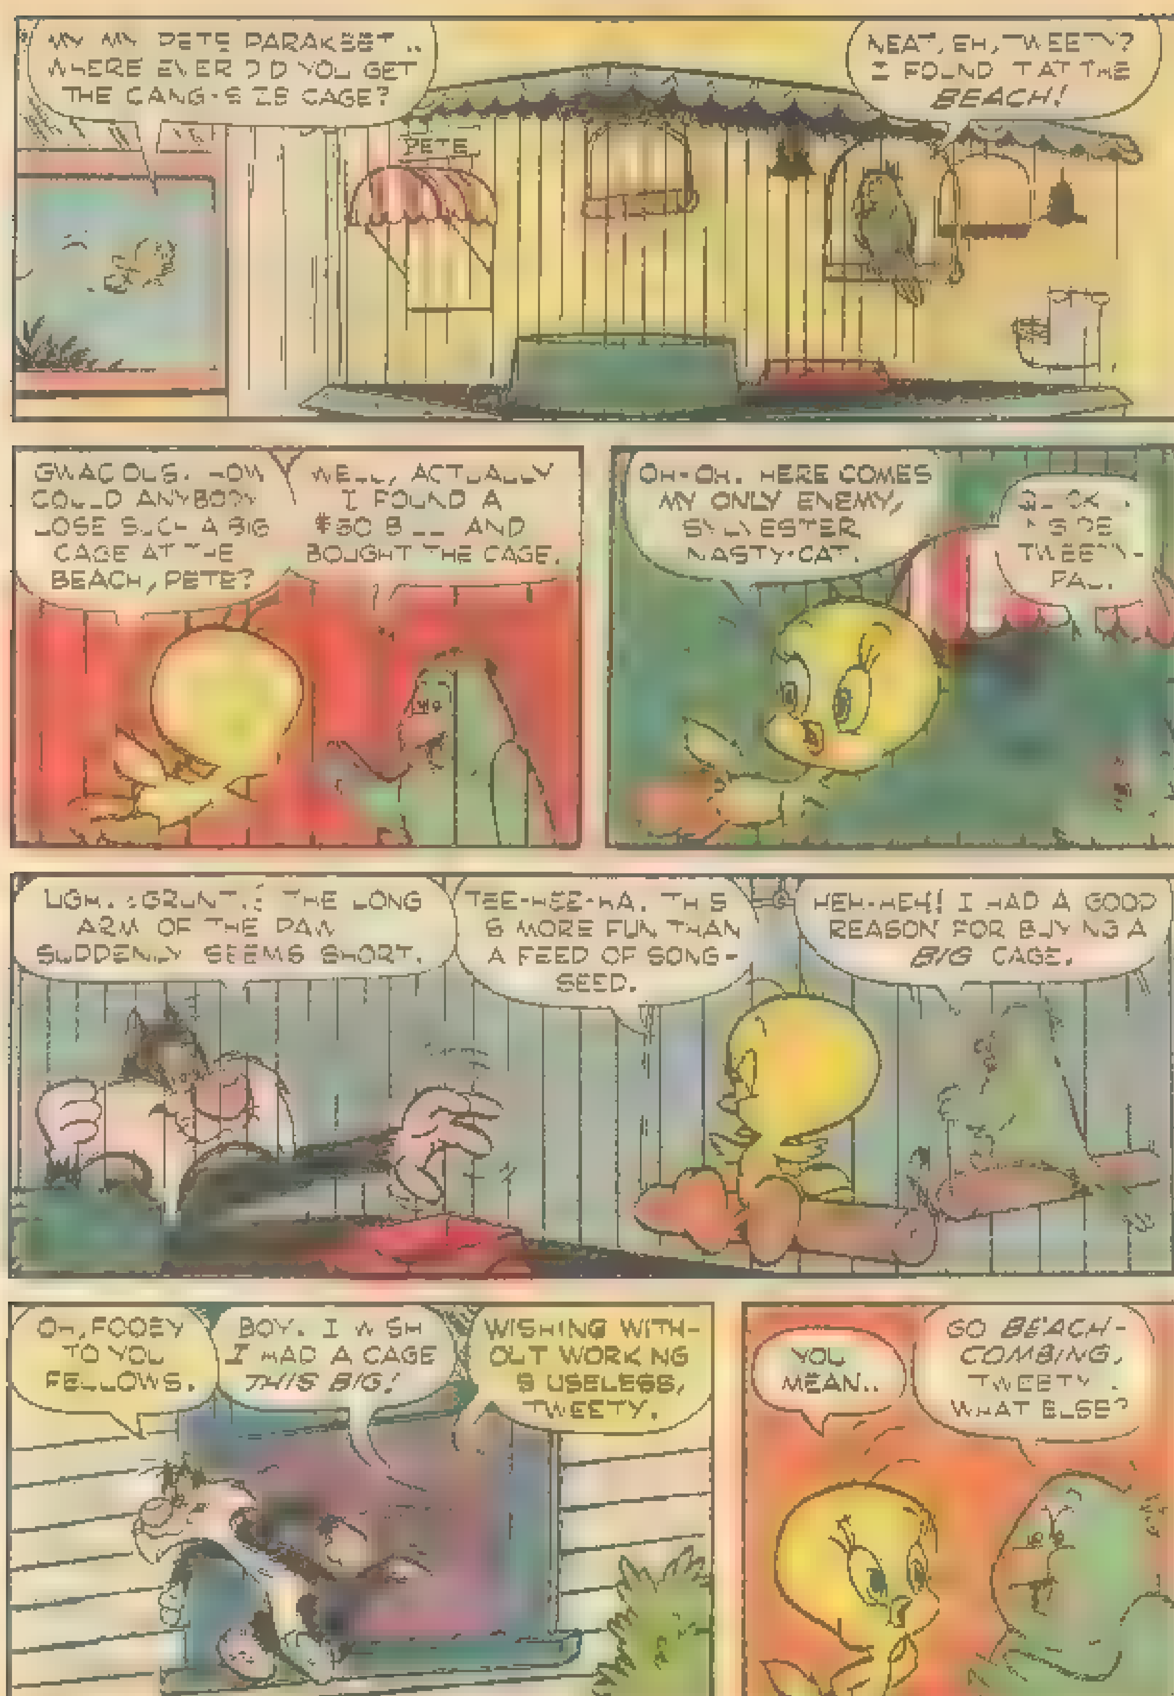

"Eet is not lost," laughed Little Pancho. "See, Burrito has found eet . . . and all because he eats flowers."

Sure enough, as Burrito chomped down on a white rose in a bouquet, the ring fell from a thorn . . . where it had caught when it had fallen from Manuel's pocket. Manuel was so happy he almost kissed Burrito. Pancho did kiss his pet, as he led him outside to tie him up so the wedding could take place without any more trouble!
